After one of the most actively contested campaigns of recent years John W. Poole was elected on Tuesday as supervisor of this township with a sweeping majority over his opponent J. W. Morey. For the position of State Senator George C. Cleveland of Watsonville won with a substantial majority over the incumbent, M. B. Johnson. In the Third Township Cleveland won over his opponent with 2008 to 1090. In the county as a whole this lead was increased to 4368 to 3547 with several precincts to report. Incomplete returns from Santa Cruz and San Benito counties show that Cleveland led in those two counties by a substantial majority.

Jos. F. O'Mally, the democratic contender for the same office appears to have received sufficient votes to assure him the democratic nomination for the November election.

The returns for the three candidates in this township were:

In the congressional race A. M. Free won decisively ove rhis opponent, Mrs. Cecelia Casserly as candidate on the Republican ticket, but Mrs. Casserly succeeded in securing the Democratic nomination and will again oppose Free at the November election.

Hiram Johnson, candidate for United States Senator was as successful in this county over his opponent Charles H. Randall as reports would indicate he was in other parts of the state.

One of the most hotly contested fights of the campaign was that between Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey and his opponent Frederick Peterson of Burlingame. Hickey appears to lead his opponent by the narrow margin of about one hundred votes. The count on this contest was being checked yesterday by the supervisors.

AERO SHOW TO DEMONSTRATE AIRPORT NEEDS

Entrants Busy In Contest for Queen of the Air

The Pacific Aero Exposition, to be held at the Redwood City Air port, September 25 to 30, will be a complete representation of the aerial industries of the entire Pacific Coast, according to new plans laid by the Pacific Aero Club of San Francisco, which is sponsoring the affair.

Invitations to join with the club in the show and air meet were dispatched yesterday to every commercial air line and flying field in California, Oregon and Washington by W. F. Hamilton, director-general of the exposition.

It is the hope of club that each will be represented by both flyers and planes at the opening or the circus.

"The club's purpose in arranging the exposition is to impress upon the public the need for more adequate airports," said Captain Roy N. Francis, president of the club, who, as former chief instructor of Kelly Field Texas, taught aviation to the greater part of the American flying force during the World War.

"We want to show the tremendous strides aviation has made on the Pacific Coast and elsewhere the past two years. And then we want to show how the rapid development has been made possible by the establishment of flying fields. It follows naturally that the future progress of aviation will be measured by the establishment of flying fields. They can do for aviation what good roads did for the automobile—make it."

Meanwhile, social interest in the exposition was being stimulated by a spirited contest among a dozen pretty airmaids for the honor of being queen of the air during the show week.

Entries in the queen contest are being received from Santa Rosa to San Jose by Mrs. Delia M. Shisler of San Francisco, chairman of the contest committee.

But first in the field were three peninsula girls: Miss Audine Martin, 43 Arch street and Miss Dora Bertolucci, 264 May street, Redwood City, and Miss Isabelle Buzard, Menlo Park.

Long attracted by aviation, their interest has been heightened by the prospect of being selected to reign over the ball and carnival that will impart festival charm to the air show.

Donning headgear and flying raiment, they spent a day last week learning of airplanes from S. G. Haughton, aviator of Alameda and Redwood City, who will do stunt flying during the aerial circus.

New Store Opening To Be Big Event

Great interest is being expressed throughout the district in the opening here today of the new Woolworth store on Broadway. So much interest has been evinced in this event by the people of Redwood City that the manager A. J. Bechet and the district superintendent C. A. Ris have made arrangements to handle a record crowd when the doors are opened this afternoon.

Plans for the opening were announced this week by the local manager. The doors will be opened at 2 o'clock and the store thrown open for inspection. Music will be furnished both in the afternoon and the evening by Sharkey's four-piece orchestra, and balloons will be given away to all children. Arrangements have also been made to have extra help on hand to give proper service. During the opening forty sales girls will be employed.

It is the intention of Manager Bechet to employ only local girls. During the opening, however, several experienced girls from other stores will be present to assist the new girls.

The Woolworth store here is in many respects in advance of the type of store which the company has been placing in towns of this size. Many new features are also being tried here for the first time. A new type sanitary candy ocunter is provided with specially arranged display cases.

The store will comprise twenty-five departments including practically every household need. A much larger stock is being carried here than in the usual type of Woolworth store of this size where only the fastest selling goods are usually stocked.

Development Era Dawning Here

Proper Development on Peninsula Depends on Well-Laid Plans, Says City Planning Expert

By Guy Wilfrid Hayler
City Planning Expert

The last article showed the structural foundation of Peninsular development as far as location possibilities and population are concerned. There is complete basis for balanced development in every way, providing the planning is far-sighted and intelligent.

Water resources, park lands and recreational reservations in the mountainous regions, residential and commercial development of attractive cities in the rolling foothills and lower lands and industrial expansion from San Francisco southward along the level tidelands fronting the bay. All this can be achieved in the best possible way by good planning, and this done now before the values of a magnificent site are dissipated or destroyed.

Perhaps the first of all essentials is water. This is an old debated subject and can only be solved upon as wide a basis as the interlocking communities themselves extend. The present situation is that the water supply is derived from various sources by various public and private agencies. They are inefficient, expensive and wholly unsatisfactory to the growing needs of the communities. The systems are beyond further improvement both from a physical point of view and administration. They answered their original purpose a long time ago and needs must be met by a more comprehensive scheme. San Francisco has solved her problem by approving of the completion of Hetch Hetchy and the acquirment of the Spring Valley Water Company's properties. Their action should be the incentive to San Mateo County to now proceed in an equally enlightened way. The example of Marin county and its municipal water district offers a signficant means of relief. The formation of a similar district would enable the best possible water supply to be provided for all the peninsula. An adequate supply is requisite not alone for residential use but for the coming industrial development of the bay shore. Salt water is infiltering into the wells near the bay and the water table is 200 feet lower than in early days. These critical conditions demand something more than mere tinkering with palliative remedies. There is every reason to believe that the fundimental need of water will be met at an early date as growth has always demanded this and secured it at whatever cost. History will repeat itself here as it has done in many other sections of the state. The need now is to hasten the day.

With more water will come additional population and industries. The arrival of these is no doubtful proposition. It is a certainty. But neither will come without planning and preparing for them.

There is a saturation point for population alone and this is entirely dictated by economic reasons. The far-reaching ramifications and requirements of industry cannot be met in a slip-shod way. The bay front lands are exactly suitable for industrial purposes, especially when harbor requirements and railroad transportation is provided. The latter is now being devised and the former cannot be long delayed. A natural channel over thirty-six feet in depth, 3,000 feet wide, narrowing to 2,000 feet below Redwood City, extends from the main harbor along the east shore of the peninsula, except for a shoal off Point San Bruno. Harbor development is conditional upon dredging, and the peninsula cities by planning their industrial frontages should be able to derive enormous profit by the accrued increment resultant thereto. Development will necessarily be the matter of many years but much economical work, if governed by practical considerations might be put in hand at the present time.

The Bay Shore highway, which in many senses is the most potential industrial artery in California, must eventually be carried through the full length of San Mateo county. The industrial region on its boundary offers unrivalled sites for all kinds of manufacturing plants. These may come in, a haphazard way with much detriment to the adjoining residential areas, as well as individual loss to themselves. Zoning the industrial land, providing for the industries desired and shutting out obnoxious ones should be done at the earliest possible moment. Encouragement of complimentary industries and prohibition of industries defeating the successful operation of other industries would be of the greatest benefit and in line with the scientific methods of present-day plant location. It must be remembered that the bay shore lands are now open and invite industries at the present time and many will locate there regardless of water requirements being defective. They may not demand water to any large extent. Therefore action on the disposition of this industrial land is not something which can be delayed. Planning in advance can alone secure order and security.

Transportation is being solved. The action of the Western Pacific railroad in planning for the operation of a line from the east across the bay and along the bay front into San Francisco will afford a direct transit outlet from the industrial region. They have visualized the needs and planned, legitimately of course, for their profit. It is up to the communities and the county to equally display the same common sense. What has been done in constructing the Bay Shore highway is wholly commendable but more is required. The Dumbarton bridge now open and the San Mateo-Hayward bridge to be opened in the fall will ultimately focus traffic of great volume in this direction. The new bridge will actually place the peninsula communities in a 10 or 12-mile radius of the rapidly expanding east bay. Every consequent artery must therefore be perfected and access both through and local as regards the cities cannot afford to be neglected. If planned now, unrivalled opportunities now existant may be used to the fullest advantage.

There is need also to plan for adequate lateral throughfares between all the existing and proposed major highways which will eventually run down the peninsula. Traffic, like water, will flood through the inadequate streets and roads of the cities unless provision is made for its deviation into established channels constructed to meets its requirements.

San Mateo county will be much more metropolitan San Francisco in the future than it is today. Its natural geographical, topographical and economic advantages are greater than almost any other city area in the United States, in the estimation of such well-known industrialists as Mr. Roger Babson, Mr. Robert Dollar and others. The aspects upon which industrial and commercial development depends have been briefly outlined in this article but they by no means cover the field.

It seems reasonable to believe that we are now in the era of impending changes of paramount importance. Shall these be consumated with skill and guidance as planning dictates, or shall they be chaotic, are the questions before us today. The future will pass judgment on what is done today.

The concluding article next week will discuss residential expansion, park and recreational requirements and improved social conditions induced by good planning.

Sportsmen Seek Uniform Ruling On Deer Season

(By Capitol News Bureau)

Sacramento, Aug. 23—The biennial drive for a uniform deer season throughout California is on. And San Mateo County with a record of 77 deer slaughtered last year, is interested along with its neighbors.

Alarmed at inroads made by hunters lured by the enthusiasm of the first of the season, sports enthusiasts in counties embraced by districts with the earliest opening date—August 1—are preparing now for a renewed drive to secure from the state legislature a readjustment of seasons so that the brunt of the earliest hunting will not continue to fall upon their happy hunting grounds.

And lending strength to this movement is the fact that within these districts, holding some of the choicest timber and brush most valuable for water conservation purposes, the greatest seasonal fire hazard is almost without exception coincident with the lifting of the ban on the forked horns.

Coastal counties from Mendocino to Ventura and all the counties west of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers comprise districts 2 and 3 where the season opens August 1. In Humboldt, Del Norte and Siskiyou counties, the season falls from September 1 until October 15, while in Modoc and Lassen Counties, the state ban is lifted September 15. In all other counties the season runs from September 16 to October 15.

Consecutive attempts at every legislative session in recent years have failed to bring about a uniform deer season law, opponents of the change claiming that the present division best coincides with the running or breeding season.

Disputing this fact, however, is such an authority as W. B. Rider, deputy state forester, who advocates a uniform season opening not later than October 1. Not only are deer in better condition in all parts of the state at that time, Rider maintains, but the fire hazard then has been reduced to a minimum in most years by the first fall rains.

"While most hunters are careful about fires in the forest or brush, there were no less than 25 fires started in various parts of the state August 1, when the season opened," declared Rider, "and the greater proportion of these were in the deer areas.

"Hunters are complaining that the deer are not in good condition, whereas later they are in prime shape. This is disputed, of course, but long observation by forest rangers leads them to this opinion.

Organization Thanks Voters For Support

George Chiossi, chairman of the San Mateo County Good Government League this week expressed his thanks to the voters for the support given the league's candidates in the recent election. Chiossi also announced that a meeting of the league will be held in the near future to make plans for future operations of the organization. The league, he stated, is to be made a permanent organization in the county.

Motor Factory Will Adjoin Mills Field

Announcement was made this week of the sale of 100 acres of land on the bayshore highway just north of Mills field. The purchase was made by the Marchetti Motor Patents, Inc. It was also announced that the purchasers plan the immediate erection of a $400,000 factory for the manufacture of aeroplane motors. The company is capitalized for $2,000,000.

Plans for the factory call for the erection of a building with 28,000 feet of floor space, while additional buildings with 18,000 square feet of floor space will accommodate the manufacture of planes. The company contemplates the placing of a new type aeroplane and marine engine on the market.

Judge Bird Gets Jail Sentence; Fine

When Walter M. Bird, former justice of the peace of the second township appeared in the court of Justice of the Peace Edward Farrell Wednesday on a charge of reckless driving he was given a taste of his own medicine. Judge Bird established quite a reputation during his time in office as a nemesis to the reckless driver, and so strict was he with the erring motorist that trial before him was always considered a sure road to a heavy fine or jail sentence.

It was, therefore, with much interest that many who had appeared before him watched the outcome of his first appearance in another justice court. Judge Bird entered a plea of guilty before Judge Farrell and received his sentence. He was sentenced to spend five days in the county jail, pay a fine of $250 and have his driving license revoked for 90 days.

Judge Bird was arrested in Burlingame two weeks ago by Constable James Wallace after a fast chase along the highway during the heavy Sunday traffic.

The service has been maintained regularly for seven years and there has never been an accident on the line. It recently was merged with the system of airways operated by Western Air Express, Inc.

The annual game census as reported by Field and Stream discloses that there are only 880 grizzly bears in the national forests in the United States, outside of Alaska, and 50 per cent of these are in Montana—not a single individual grizzly is reported from any of the national forests in California, a State in which these animals once were abundant.

The Chrysler Corporation has purchased a fifty-acre tract near Oakland for a reported sum of $250,000, on which it is expected that an automobile assembly plant, costing approximately $7,000,000, will be erected. Although no announcement has been made by Chrysler officials in Detroit, where the deal was consummated, it is believed that the plant is to be used for the distribution of the new Chrysler-built Plymouth.

This year's Serra Pilgrimage and Fiesta opened August 23 with Governor C. C. Young, Mayor James Rolph Jr., and mayors of all the cities surrounding Monterey——San Jose, Watsonville, Santa Cruz, Salinas, Hollister, Gilroy and King City—heading the "big parade" in the costumes of the days of the dons. The parade pictured California history from the earliest discovery by Cabrillo in 1542 to the present day.

Total registered vote of the State of California as necessary for the August primary election the 28th inst. is 2,009,599, according to figures announced by Secretary of State Jordan. It represents an increase of 97,672 to the Republican party and 109,046 to the Democrats.

General Petroleum has recorded on 3,929.8 acres ten miles south of Corcoran, partly in Kings and partly in Tulare county. The lessee is the California Natural Gas Company of San Francisco which drilled several big gas wells on this land years ago. The lease, dated July 28, 1928, allows one year in which to start drilling, runs for twenty years, and calls for one-eighth royalty.

Organization of a Smith-For-President-Fairweather-For-Congress Club, and plans for the campaign of Governor Alfred E. Smith for president were perfected at a meeting of the Kern County Democratic Central Committee recently. The new club plans to swing into active support of the candidacy of John H. Fairweather, Reedley editor, for congressional representative from the seventh district, according to John P. Brooke, chairman of the Democratic Central Committee.

Expenditure by the Cowell Lime and Cement company of approximately $125,000 in dividing 3,000 acres along the Merced River near Hopeton into 15 model dairy units was announced last week. Bids for leveling and grading have been asked upon the completion of a $10,000 surveying project on the property, known as the Cowell ranch. When completed, the project will offer dairy accommodations which are expected to add from 1,000 to 1,500 head of cattle to Merced county's total and give the production of butterfat in that section a spectacular increase.

Toppling to earth with a great roar that was plainly heard two miles from the spot where it had withstood the ravages of centuries, a living Giant Sequoia blocked the General's Highway in the national park one day last week. Park rangers were sent to Buena Vista Point, where the tree had stood among a group of three sequestered forest monarchs, and began blasting to remove the obstruction. The Sequoia fell, it is believed, because it was top heavy. The tree, twenty feet in diameter, bore the scars of a fire believed to have occurred 200 years ago

ARE YOU SUPERSTITIOUS ???

By FRANK ELLIS, JR.

Birds

BIRDS seem to have played an important part in the superstitions of all countries and ages. Because they were continually on the wing, they were supposed to observe and know the most hidden action of men, and all their secrets. As the old adage runs: "No one knows except perhaps some bird."

Some of the singular superstitions in regard to birds are:

If anyone cut out the tongue of a goose alive and lay it upon the breast of a man or woman asleep, they will confess all their sins.

If a man carry the heart of a male crow, and his wife the heart of a female, they will agree between themselves all their lifetime.

The eyes and heart of a nightingale laid about men in bed will keep them awake. If anyone dissolve them and give them secretly to anyone in drink, he will never sleep, but will die; there is no cure.

That the soul quits the dead body in the form of a bird is a widespread belief or superstition from the earliest of time. The Egyptians believed a bird signified the soul of a man.

A song sung by the boatmen of Milo, Venice, declares that the spirit of Daniel Manin, the patriot, is flying above the lagoons to this day in the shape of a beautiful white dove.

Mohammed is said to have derived oracular information from a pigeon, which was a representative of the angel Gabriel to appear and whisper in his ear. Another curious belief is that certain birds possessed stones of remarkable talismanic virtues. One of these supposed to be found in the brain of a vulture gave health and success to its finder.

Storms and the Moon

IN BOHEMIA the peasants hold it unlucky to walk under a rainbow, and they say that the rain which descends through the bow blights all it falls upon.

Among the ancients good and ill luck were derived from thunder and lightning; if these occurred on the left, the omen was favorable. Thunder in reports even in number indicates good luck; lightning from north to west, evil, if accompanied by hail.

The moon exercises a great influence on good or ill luck; to see a new moon the first time after change, on the right hand or directly before one, indicates good luck.

The Africans believe you should never begin a journey in the last quarter of the moon. It is bad luck to look at the new moon for the first time through the window. A new moon seen over your right shoulder is lucky; over the left shoulder is unlucky; and straight before you promises good luck to the end of the season.

Ring Lardner was born in Niles, Mich., in 1885, and attended Armour Institute of Technology at Chicago. After starting as a reporter on the South Bend Times, he became a sporting writer on the Chicago Inter Ocean, Chicago Examiner, Chicago Tribune, Boston American and Chicago American. Since 1919, his articles have been widely syndicated in newspapers throughout the United States. He first established his national reputation for humor with the famous YOU KNOW ME, AL series in the Saturday Evening Post. Since then there have come a series of books, magazines and short stories that secured his position as one of America's leading humorists. Mr. Lardner is married, lives in Great Neck, L. I., and has four children, all boys.

By RING LARDNER

Professor Durant's pronouncement, which started this brawl, reminds me of the familiar story of the twe Scotchmen, all named Sandy. It seems that one of them was walking along the main street of Glasgow without an umbrella in a driving rainstorm. He was arrested by a bairn (policeman) and locked up in the kittie (jail). He sent for his friend Sandy.

"Weel, Sandy," said Sandy, "wot be you-all doin' in the kittie?"

"Ah be here for trekkin' in de rain wi' no umbrella," said Sandy.

"But, mon, they canna put ye in jail for dot!" remonstrated Sandy.

"They canna, but they hae!" dreed Sandy.

A man, says Doctor Durant, cannot fall in love after the age of thirty. All right; he can't. But does he? I will recount a case which recently came under my personal observation and leave the answer to the jury that tried Remus.

George Gadget was a junior at Groton. It seemed kind of funny calling him a junior, because he was seventy-three years old. He had been a student at Groton for fifty-nine years. He wasn't as dumb as this sounds; he was merely economical. Staying there saved him the expense of going back to reunions. And besides, his instructor in spelling, who was a great hockey fan and loved to see Groton win, kept flunking him so he couldn't graduate and leave the school without a capable goalie. Gadet had been goalie on the varsity team for half a century and during the last twenty years of this period, none of Groton's opponents had been able to shoot the puck through his beard for a goal.

Gadget had never gone with girls. He was looked on by his buddies as a misogynist. It was a great surprise to them, therefore, when he got up in reading class one morning and announced his engagement to Miss Hazel Taffeta of Laudanum, New Jersey.

Miss Taffeta was an alumna of Bryn Mawr where she had been a classmate of June Addams and Mrs. Whiffen. She was now eighty-one and Dartmouth had just elected her Snow Queen of its winter carnival. In fulfillment of her duty in seeing that the snow was kept off the streets of college towns, she visited Groton and met Gadget.

"Hello, girlie," said the latter.

"Hello, goalie," said Miss Taffeta. "I hear you are a misogynist."

"And I hear you are a confirmed spinster," retorted Gadget.

"Let's celibate," suggested Miss Taffeta.

The pair thus began their acquaintance in a spirit of raillery, but in less than a week their relations had lost all semblance of mere good fellowship and they were acting like two or more turtle doves. Gadget sent her candy, flowers, dunning letters, new electric-light bulbs, tooth paste and hair restorer. She sent him a patent beard hanger and spent an hour under his window every night, trying to tune a guitar, but most of the while she just sat out in front of the Elks hotel and languished, doing it so well that the school regents asked her to remain at Groton as languish teacher.

They were married and George asked her where she would like to go for a honeymoon. She inquired whether he had ever been at Niagara falls. He replied that he had been there when it was just a leak; in fact, he had telephoned the plumber about it. If the plumber had got there promptly, there wouldn't have been any trouble. Personally he would just as soon watch the water run into the bathtub, but if she wanted to go there, he would pay her expenses and while she was gone, try to brush up in his spelling. He wanted to graduate now, and get out in the world and make his way.

George Gadget did not marry Hazel Taffeta for money. She had none. He did not marry her for social position. She had none. He did not marry her to obtain a housekeeper. He had no house. He did not marry her for her looks. She was terrible.

Was it love, or am I a fool?

Finding a Link

Since the name of George Rogers Clark, conqueror of the old Northwest, has sprung into prominence there are many who claim some distinction because of ownership of a thing Clark once owned, or touched, or because an ancestor fought with Clark, or because Clark camped one night near an ancestor's home. But the strangest, and not at all unusual of all claims, so the George Rogers Clark memorial commission says, is that of a number of persons who insist they are descendants of George Rogers Clark, when Clark lived and died a bachelor.

Tom Mix on Animal Acts

DURING his recent engagement in Boston, Tom Mix, expert horseman and popular motion picture actor, expressed some of his opinions upon the exploitation of animals for the entertainment of amusement seekers. So clearly do they uphold the tenets of the Jack London Club, which continues to operate as a check upon the stage performances of animals, that they will interest a great number of readers. He said: "I am unalterably against any treatment of animals by humans that can lead even to the possibility of discomfort for the animals. If animals had been intended to go mincing about on their hind legs, wearing calico dresses and carrying sunshades, they would have been made that way in the first place."

Mix also dealt a characteristic, telling blow to the rodeo when he said: "Rodeos are a purely artificial sport, devised to satisfy jaded appetites for spectacle. They serve no good purpose they are not a characteristic recreation of the true cowboy; they are not typical of any phase of authentic frontier life, and they mock at a fundamental of cowboy life, which is the good care of horses that are a means of livelihood, to say nothing of being pretty good company.

"And then there's ear-cropping for dogs and tail-docking for horses. I wouldn't want to look any horse in the face after I had had his tail docked. If it had been meant to be that way, it would have been. I often wonder how the fellow who crops his dog's ears just for the sake of making a show in some foolish dog show ring would like it if someone came along and told him his business success would depend upon his ears snipped off just a little this way or that way."—Our Dumb Animal.

Will C. Wood Praises Hoover For Dam Stand

(By Capitol News Bureau)

Sacramento, Aug. 29—Declaring that 'he has rendered splendid service in advancing the project and he now promises to carry on until it is realized," Will C. Wood, state bank superintendent, today warmly endorsed Herbert Hoover's enunciation of his policy on Boulder Canyon Dam in his southern California campaign tour.

"I am delighted," said Wood, "that Hoover has reiterated his commitment to Boulder Canyon development. While Secretary of Commerce he has rendered splendid service in advancing the project and he now promises to carry on until the project is realized.

"Hoover has always stood for the cooperation of all states concerned in working out the project. We must have Boulder Canyon Dam, but in getting it we should be careful to keep the good will of our neighbor states, with whom will be a large part of California's most valuable trade relations in the future."

County to Get $1,099.36 For Industrial Schools

By LAWRENCE MONFORT
(Staff Correspondent)

Sacramento, Aug. 23—(CNB)—Youth must be served, and neither San Mateo County nor California can keep up with his demands for proper equipment for the battle with life, it appears today.

The cost of vocational education in the state is more than the state can pay and San Mateo County, instead of getting dollar for dollar, must be satisfied with a pro rata for its outlay in some vocational subjects, Nicholas Ricciardi, chief of the division of city secondary schools announced. The County, he said, will receive $1099.36 covering disbursements for moneys expended in agricultural, home economics and trades and industries instruction.

Telephone service, a public trust

THE widespread ownership of the Bell Telephone System places an obligation on its management to guard the savings of its hundreds of thousands of stockholders.

Its responsibility for so large a part of the country's telephone service imposes an obligation that the service shall always be adequate, dependable and satisfactory to the user.

The only sound policy that will meet these obligations is to continue to furnish the best possible service at the lowest cost consistent with financial safety.

There is then in the Bell System no incentive to earn speculative or large profits. Earnings must be sufficient to assure the best possible service and the financial integrity of the business. Anything in excess of these requirements goes toward extending the service or keeping down the rates.

This is fundamental in the policy of the company.

The Bell System's ideal is the same as that of the public it serves—the most telephone service and the best, at the least cost to the user. It accepts its responsibility for a nation-wide telephone service as a public trust.

WOODSIDE

The Virden place, which belonged to Mr. Fitzaugh and has been under lease for several years to Chas. Virden, has been sold to Robert C. Frick, an attorney formerly of San Francisco but now of Los Angeles. Mr. Frick took possession this week but will make extensive alterations on the house before occupying it.

George H. King, who was superintendent for Mr. Virden, together with his wife and son, started this week on a motor trip to his old home in Michigan. He will visit Tahoe and the Yellowstone on his trip East and the Grand Canyon of the Colorado on the return trip. He plans to be gone a year as he wants to experience one more winter in Michigan.

Two very fine homes are under construction for Edward and Herman Wobber on their property adjoining the lands of the Bear Gulch Water Co. This was the old Neuman place and consists chiefly of a beautifully wooded canyon. The homes, however, are being built on the steep hillside overlooking the canyon and will afford a view not only of the Woodside valley but also a wide stretch of the bay with the Mt. Hamilton range in the background.

James Wilkie entertained a number of his friends at a birthday party at his house on Saturday night after the Firemen's dance.

Miss Abbott, County Superintendent of Schools, was a visitor at the local school on Wednesday.

Mrs. Virginia Miller and son, who have been visiting Mrs. Miller's mother and grandmother for the summer, will return next week to Portland, where Mr. Miller is engaged in business.

Mr. and Mrs. William Lawson returned on Thursday from Vancouver. Mrs. Lawson will remain here for a while with her father and mother, Dr. and Mrs. Bradford Leavitt.

There will be no preaching service at the Woodside Church this Sunday. Mr. St. John has not returned from his vacation trip to Colorado and Rev. Mr. Eccles of San Jose, who has been filling the pulpit in his absence, is obliged to be elsewhere on that day.

High School Notes

Simultaneous with the opening of the scholastic activities at Sequoia, the fall practice season for the various sports has been started, and large numbers of boys are turning out for their respective sports.

Fifty-eight men ranging in weight from 120 to 190 pounds constitute the Sequoia football turnout for this year. Forty of these men have signed up as candidates for the varsity, while 18 expect to try for the 130s.

As more boys are expected to return to school, the turnout should be a very large one in comparison with turnouts of other years, says Coach Ray Dimmick. With the addition of Casanova to the coaching staff and with the large turnout, a good eleven should be able to take on the Mission high team in their first practice game Friday, September 7, here at the Sequoia field.

Following are other games already scheduled: Sat., Sept. 15, Monterey high, there; Sat., Sept. 22, Watsonville high, here; Sat., Sept. 29, Salinas high, there.

Basketball prospects for the year are good, according to coach Frank Griffin. Fifty-six boys have signed up for the lightweight teams. The 120 pound team, with 22 candidates, will be small compared to previous teams, but, stated the "wire-haired" coach of many successful seasons, they should turn out to be a fast team, if the showing in preliminary practice holds true for the season.

The 110's average about an even century weight. Thirty-four "little-yets" poked their heads into the gym to sign up and, says "Griff", the dimes are every bit as good as last year's team.

The only game scheduled as yet is to be played on the Sequoia pavilion, Friday night, September 21, with St. Ignatius.

Coach Jim Eva, Sequoian swimming instructor, opened the Fall practice season Wednesday, August 22. Forty-four ambitious youths were on hand to uphold the athletic honors of the school along aquatic lines. Many of the boys are making their debut into the art of swimming, while several were members of last year's squad.

Because of the comparative newness of the sport, the large turnout seems to indicate to Coach Jim Eva that a successful year is probable.

"I have good material in the B class, while the A and D classes are not so fortunate," explained Coach Jim Eva. "I am in need of some good lightweight material to build upon for future years."

Four-Speed Car Shows Features Of New Type

Motor-wise as the California motorist is reputed to be, it is surprising to find so few who actually understand the principle of the Graham-Paige four-speed transmission, says Carl Lindquist, Graham-Paige dealer here.

"It is the general belief of most motorists here," said Lindquist, "that fourth speed on these cars is merely an over-drive in high gear. This is decidedly not the case with this Graham-Paige feature.

"The fourth gear in these models is a direct drive from the crankshaft to the rear wheels. The use of one more gear in the transmission permits the use of a fast rear axle, and it is the latter feature that reduces the engine speed in relation to the car speed; reduces "wear and tear" on the engine; reduces the cost of operation; and gives the Graham-Paige owner a motor car that is without parallel in comfort, economy, and performance.

"The four-speed transmission, as modernized by the use of internal gearing for third speed, is the one device that not only gives the advantages of a fast rear axle, but, in addition, actually improves the pick-up and hill-climbing ability.

"The third speed, because of the silence and efficiency of the internal gearing is virtually an alternative direct drive, yet gives the increased pulling power of a lower gear.

Transmission Problem Solved

"The old-fashioned four-speed transmission was not acceptable to the American motorist because of the noise and low efficiency of its spur gears. The use of internal gears eliminates these draw-backs. In fact, the transmission problem has been solved—what was formerly regarded by many motorists as the one remaining draw-back to pleasurable motoring has become instead a positive advantage."

A more detailed analysis will explain how the improved transmission benefits the car and the driver.

Advantage in Third Gear

The transmission itself, because of its internal gear construction, gives the following advantages in third speed:

Quiet operation—The gear teeth approach at a very slight angle and mesh with a sliding contact.

Longer life—The gears are in constant mesh, hence are not subject to destructive clashing, chipping, and stripping.

Increased efficiency—This form of gearing has very low frictional losses, delivering 98 per cent of the power received.

Improved car performance—Better acceleration and hill-climbing powers result naturally because more power is delivered to the rear wheels.

Ease of control—Changes of speed from fourth to third or from third to fourth can be made with facility under any driving conditions normally calling for a change of gears.

Advantages in Direct Drive

Because of the higher geared rear axle, the engine and the drive shaft in the four-speed car revolve 25 per cent slower than in the average three-speed car. Engine vibration, noises, and wear are reduced. Cooling is better and gasoline and oil consumption lower, because the engine takes fewer strokes per mile and operates within its most efficient range. Engine life is lengthened, for at the end of 10,000 miles the engine has made only three-fourths as many revolutions as with the average gear ratio, and moreover operates without attaining speeds that cause destructive vibration and severe stresses. Riding ease is increased greatly because of the reduced noise, roar, and vibration.

Robert Poole, son of Supervisor and Mrs. John W. Poole, returned this week from a seven week's trip on the S. S. Sierra. The young man was employed as helper in the engine room of the ship. He will return to Stanford on October 1.

Ernest Lock to Open New Store Tomorrow

What a Noted Food Authority says: about ICE

By SARAH FIELD SPLINT

Food Editor McCall's Magazine

"Not for a minute would you consider buying your milk or meat or fish from a dealer who did not keep his supply thoroughly refrigerated! And not for a minute should you consider keeping these foods in your own house unless you can provide the same careful ice refrigeration.

"Foods that come to the housewife fresh from the dealer often deteriorate in the kitchen for want of proper icing. Such foods spoil readily and should be kept at as uniform a temperature as possible.

"A well-iced refrigerator is invaluable not only as a safe-guard to health, but also as a means of preserving the natural flavors in our foods."

Menlo Park

The death of William P. Woods of Menlo Park at his home on Santa Cruz avenue last Saturday recalls his activities on the race track thirty years ago when he was widely known as a jockey and trainer. He was born in Scotland but as a lad came with his father, James Woods, who resides in Menlo Park, to Calaveras County, where the elder Woods was superintendent of a mine. Later Woods senior purchased a string of race horses and came to the Bay district track in San Francisco. He brought his three youngsters with him, Johnny, James and William, all becoming jockeys. The former became famous and was known on every track in this country and in England, equalling Tod Sloane in skill and courage. He commanded the highest salary, receiving $12,000 a year in his prime. He rode his father's horses and at times also handled horses for other turfmen. William was a noted trainer who prepared his father's racers for the track at Emeryville, the bay district track and Tanforan. In 1893 the boys created a sensation on the Bay District track by winning an eighty to one shot with their celebrated mare Lady Grey. William conditioned the animal and Johnny rode her winning the famous race by a neck. The race nearly broke the bookies and Woods senior walked away with winnings amounting to $15,000. This race was the sensation of the season. Woods Senior was a noted turfman in his day owning such fleet-footed racers as Greenock, Lady Grey, Sherry, Mollie Bawn, Red Tip and others that won fame on the turf over a quarter of a centure ago when racing was at its height in California and permitted by law. Greenock was a famous stallion that won fame and money for his owner, both in this country and England. The animal was a pet of the deceased who prepared and trained him for every race. Greenock won a thirty to one shot at Emeryville and big stakes in other lands. The noted stallion was finally sold to Mrs. Phebe Hearst. The animal was taken by William Woods to Mrs. Hearst's ranch in Mexico and on the way was shot and killed by Mexican bandits.

Every oldtimer who followed racing in those bygone days will recall the Woods family, who were identified with the sport. Johnny died at San Francisco of tuberculosis brought on by endeavoring to reduce in weight to comply with the rules of the track. James is still living and William passed on last Saturday. Mr. Woods is reaching his eightieth years and in his reminiscent moods loves to tell of those other days when racing was sport and when his horses won fame and money on the turf, and when his son Johnny proudly pushed his racers to victory cheered by the multitudes, and by William, the deceased, who trained them and brought them to the track in perfect condition to be ridden by his noted brother. The old man keenly feels the loss of his son but consoles himself with the thought that he will soon meet him and Johnny on the other side.

St. Joseph's Alumni will hold a food sale in the building near the postoffice on Saturday. Home-made cakes and pies and fruit of all kinds will be offered for sale by a bevy of pretty girls. Come and secure your supply of these good things for your Sunday dinner.

Mrs. A. E. Thomas, who has just recovered from a severe illness has gone to Berkeley to visit relatives for a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Dewey will leave Monday for a three weeks' trip to Seattle. All points of interest in that section will be visited before they return.

The dove season will open tomorrow. All local hunters are to visit the haunts of the cooing dove, to slaughter and destroy it. Certainly it is a pity that this innocent bird, the symbol of peace, should furnish amusement for the ruthless hunter, but the law permits and so the bird will succumb the brutal instincts of its master next Saturday.

Mr. Blake is still searching for a site for his pavilion but the prices asked by the property owners is so exorbitant that it is likely that Mr. Blake may decide to go elsewhere.

The election on Tuesday was a quiet affair, quiet in contrast to the contrasts of thirty years ago when fist fights would be the order of the day, but "dem days is gone forever."

The city council held an adjourned meeting last Monday evening, all members being present. Only routine business was transacted at the meeting. Engineer Armstrong presented his report of his activities and data secured in the Bear Gulch rate case. It is a thorough report showing the operations and income of the Bear Gulch Water Company during the past year. It was ordered filed.

BURLINGAME GIRL TO COMPETE IN SPELLING MATCH

Children and Adults To Try for Prizes In Hard Words

SACRAMENTO, August 30 — County spelling champions from the schools of the state and adults who have entered in the free-for-all class are in the final stages of training for the State Fair Spelling Contest, which will be held at California's greatest exposition next month.

The school champions were selected as a result of preliminary contests. There were no preliminaries for the adults and entries for this are still open.

San Mateo county's champion is Barbara Russell of Burlingame, in the elementary school class.

The elementary school finals will be held at the fair at 10 a. m. Saturday, September 1, and the high school finals the same day at 2 p. m.

The adult contest will be held at 10 a. m. September 4th. This is open to every resident of California. All three contests will be held in the convention tent adjoining the educational building and will be open to the public.

The school contests will be particularly interesting, as they will be oral and will be in the nature of a "spell-down." Contestants will not be eliminated until they misspell three words.

The prizes in each contest will be $200 in cash and a gold metal for first place, $100 and silver medal for second place, and $50 and a bronze medal for third place.

"This is the first state-wide spelling contest ever held and a remarkable result was obtained," said Ellis Franklin, one of the State Fair directors, who is in charge of the educational department. "With a very few exceptions, the entire state will be represented in these school contests. The county superintendents of schools and the principals and teachers are to be commended for their energy and effort in making this a success."

Statistics Show Divorces Greatest In Second Year

By ESTO BROUGHTON
(Staff Correspondent)

Sacramento, Aug. 29—(CNB)—The older the marriage, the greater the "life expectancy".

And that rule goes in Redwood City, San Francisco, Los Angeles or in any other California community according to a divorce analysis submitted to the State Bureau of Vital Statistics today by the federal census bureau.

Redwood City, the report says, the second year is the danger year for a marriage since the highest percentage of divorces come in after that period. In the state at large, the matrimonial sea clears in storms and rifts until every year after the seventh marks a distinct recession in legal partings.

"Marriage is constituted like a friendship, and old wives and old friends wear best, it seems, for 50 per cent of all divorces occur during the first five years, and two-thirds of all divorces during the first ten years.

Here are some ifiteresting facts gleaned from the log of the good ship matrimony in California.

If a disillusioned hubby decides to drown his sorrow in drink, he usually adopts the bottle during the sixth year of the marital cruise. Desertion seldom is reported during the first five years.

Children Reduce Number of Breaks In Family Life

By LAWRENCE MONFORT
Staff Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 29—Children are literally the tie that binds a man and wife together, if a federal-state survey of the divorce trend, just completed, may be accepted as a criterion.

Childless couples seek freedom in the divorce courts far more frequently than those with offspring, the study shows. And one feather which should be tucked in father's cap is that he seldom asks a divorce from the mother of his children, although childless husbands are seeking legal separations more and more frequently.

Father love may often stay a man's hand when his love for his mate has grown cold, according to State Statistician L. E. Ross, for in a divorce settlement children, particularly young children are usually awarded to the mother. There are fewer misunderstandings between husband and wife, too, when selfishness is pushed into the background by a common interest in children.

In San Mateo county, this reluctance of fatherhood to break up the home is revealed in the fact that 66 per cent of the divorces granted to complaining husbands are in instances where the marriage is childless.

The wife who is also a mother, likewise makes a good record in dodging marital storms, far better than the childless wife, although not up to the high average set by fathers. In San Mateo county, for instance, 56.7 per cent of the divorces granted to wives are in cases where there are no children.

In the nation at large, as in California, love of children is the best guarantee that husband and wife will "live happily ever after", although the rates vary some in states, according to Statistician Ross. Of 179,397 divorces granted last year, he cities only 64,698 broke up homes where babies had joined the family circle.

Minor children figure now in only 36 per cent of the divorce cases of the United States, an improvement of nearly 4 per cent over the allegedly "good old days" in the 80's.

Boy Demonstrates Modern Achievements In Communication

Kiddy cars and toy automobiles hold no more thrills for Howard Bentley, age two years, of Oakland. The other day Howard made a solo trip to Los Angeles to visit his grandmother and, scorning the usual forms of travel, he promptly elected the air route.

He was placed aboard a Maddux airliner at Mills Field, San Mateo county, as an "express package" by his mother, Mrs. H. W. Bentley, 695 Arlington avenue, Oakland. Pilot John Guglielmetti was in charge of the precious cargo. After an exciting three-hour voyage, which Howard enjoyed to the utmost, the plane reached the airport at Los Angeles where Grandmother Mrs. George P. Edwards was on hand to claim the "shipment".

Remembering that the first duty of a traveler is towards the ones left behind, Howard made his way to the nearest telephone and advised his mother by long distance of his safe arrival. As further proof he sent his picture home by telephone.

"There's nothing backward about these modern youngsters," commented L. C. Brown, local manager of the telephone company. "Here's a lad who in three hours time initiated himself into three wonders of the age, Airplane, Telephone and Telephotograph."

I did, somehow. Perhaps they had heard our voices, for as I walked down the hall, the door of the Grosvenor apartment sprang open, and I heard—laughter! Not loud, not merry: a happy ripple of content. But it grew merry when I entered. I was so dazed to see Julia sitting on a blue sofa, and beside her, holding her hand, Professor Harrington. Near by sat Peter Standing, hat in hand, was Mr. Almy.

"We had to have you here to make it complete!" cried Julia, rushing toward me with such a smile on her face as had never been seen there before. "A miracle has happened!"

I sank into a chair.

"It must have," I gasped; "Ernesto's got religion!"

"Good old Ernesto!" cried Peter. "Why aren't you joyful, too, Constance?"

Embarrassed, I glowered severely at Mr. Almy, who, the cause of my mistaken anguish, and the only calm person present—Professor Harrington was in such a state of ecstasy he couldn't speak at all!—came to my rescue.

"We just wanted to return some of your correspondence," he said; and from his pocket he produced my yellow note!

The professor now found his voice: "Miss Fuller kindly let me use that bit of paper temporarily," he said in his gentle, precise manner; "it was to rescue me from great difficulties. And it finally brought me to my dear brother's child, whom I had never expected to see in this world."

We were silent a moment, before the picture of that fine old-fashioned gentleman and that beautiful and gifted girl. At last freed, one from the sorrow, the other from the persecution, which had filled their lives, there could be no doubt that their happy, unexpected reunion foreshadowed long years of sweet relationship. They were absorbed in each other; Mr. Almy beckoned Peter and me into the little reception-room and shut the door.

"Am I never to know what has happened?" I demanded.

"You mean since you slammed Darrow's door?" inquired Mr. Almy. "We heard you! Well, I didn't blame you, then. But this is what happened:

"Burton, taking Professor Harrington's place, started to reach for the spring-lancet as directed, when suddenly he straightened up and asked Tucker how far the professor had stooped to see into the law-book alcove from the rear."

"You see," interrupted Peter, "being just Harrington's height, I would of course see just what Harrington saw. And I had noticed that when Farrell, who took Grosvenor's place, said he saw me through the gap, as he stooped, I didn't see him at all! Now, that spring-lancet was right on the edge of the shelf, close beside Farrell; and while I could see it—I said I could, you know—it was only by stooping over that I did so. So it occurred to me to ask Tucker how much the professor had stooped."

"And he said," continued Mr. Almy, taking up his story, "that Harrington hadn't stooped at all, but had stood upright all the time! Therefore we told Burton to look into the gap and see where the lancet was, assuming that Harrington might have seen it and then reached for it without bending. And then—"

"I couldn't come within eight inches of it, without stooping over!" cried Peter, triumphantly.

"But you said the professor admitted he made those streaks that were found in the dust between the rows of books," I suggested. "Didn't he reach in there?"

"Yes, but just to feel, according to his story, whether or not there was any third row of books concealed behind the front row, as is often the case on crowded shelves," explained Mr. Almy. "This explanation was borne out to some extent by the fact that the marks in the dust were, indeed, far back from the edge of the shelf where the spring-lancet was placed, and it is partly corroborated by Tucker's statement that the professor never stooped over. Furthermore, it furnished a clew as to why Mr. Grosvenor should have been stooping to look through the gap. He was making a thorough search for that law book. So then Burton had another idea."

"Oh, we all had it," demurred Peter; "but perhaps it occurred to me first, seeing that I had Harrington's part. He seemed to be let out; it looked as if his story were true. Yet there Mr. Grosvenor was, killed by that instrument—how? Well, I said: 'I can't see Farrell, but he can see me, when he's stooping over as Grosvenor was. Now, that old man had a weak heart and a bad conscience. He must have got a dreadful shock when he saw Harrington right in front of him. He must undoubtedly have thought Harrington had come to look for Clarihew's "Notes," his own property, the book Grosvenor had had stolen from him, even though the theft didn't quite come off as hoped. If a man in such circumstances, standing in such a position, had such a shock, what would he do?'"

"So we worked it all out, with Tucker's help," finished Mr. Almy, "and, following Burton's lead, were able to reconstruct what undoubtedly did happen to Mr. Grosvenor. Tucker said he jerked himself upright suddenly from that stooping position, when we asked him to remember just what happened after the old man looked into the gap, and that his right hand, which was stretching toward the lancet, you know, slid along the side of the bookshelf. Then, according to Tucker, 'the box clicked,' and the old man toppled over, slowly and heavily, but without much noise.

"We worked this description out in detail; it was soon evident that the sliding of the hand along the bookshelf was Mr. Grosvenor's attempt to steady himself, as he had jerked himself off his balance when rebounding from the shock of seeing the professor so unexpectedly. But instead of recovering his balance, he lost it entirely. His frail wrist hit violently against the base of the spring-lancet, which was lying set on the edge of the shelf—set, as we know from the wound inflicted, at its greatest depth, doubtless to give full scope for comparison between its incisions and the scratches on Clarihew's 'Notes.' He shot the lancet along the shelf forcibly until it struck the upright division between the book-shelves, and set it off on his own wrist, thus forced against the base of the lancet, by accidentally pressing the trigger on the edge of the shelf over which it was hanging."

"Just one thing more, please!" I begged. "Had Professor Harrington come to Darrow's for Clarihew's 'Notes'?"

Mr. Almy laughed.

"He was the one person who had not! He hadn't even noticed the advertisements, either of the auction or the purchase. He had, in fact, quite given up his old law book, which he was chiefly sorry to lose for sentimental reasons. You see, Mr. Grosvenor—and with this final wrong, we might dismiss that unhappy old man, since the one he injured bears him no grudge because she is incapable of doing so—Mr. Grosvenor had written to Professor Harrington, while the latter was still in England, that the niece he knew had been born had died soon after her mother. That was why the professor never made any attempt to find his niece. Well! That was a reunion when we broke the good tidings to them!"

"What a lot you're responsible for, Peter!" said I.

"Promising young fellow, he is," smiled Mr. Almy. "I engaged him again this morning. And first thing he does is fall out with his sister! I merely said she'd be a good one to help with the job."

"Stuff!" said Peter, huffily. "All I did was tell her she was young; she goes straight up in the air and stays there."

"What a dreadful thing to tell one who is young!" I remonstrated. "Do you really want Nancy, Mr. Almy?"

"Yes, if you could persuade her to come. I want a keyhole to be found for that lonesome key. Surely there's one here or hereabouts. I must leave the job in good hands; I'm going home for some sleep, so's the professor."

I ascended to the third floor, there to find Nancy determinedly reading the Sunday fashion supplement.

"Why don't you come down and celebrate, as invited?" I inquired.

"Peter's scandalized at me! After the way he acted, himself, and after all I've done for him! Why? Because I told him how I thought once that Mr. Case was trying to steal Clarihew's 'Notes'!"

"Was he scandalized because you stole it yourself?"

"No, he said that was first-rate; but no one old enough to be a judge of character could think Mr. Case capable of such a thing. He never thought anything of Mr. Case, himself, until after what Julia told him and Mr. Almy!"

"What was that?"

"Long ago, he knew Julia's mother—oh, very well; he wanted to marry her, but she didn't care for him. He said she was a very romantic girl, he thought specially because her father was so stern; and he—Mr. Case—well, he never was very exciting, I guess. But yesterday, when Julia was most under suspicion, he came here and offered, for her mother's sake, to help her in any possible way. You know last Thursday, when you and he and Mr. Roberts and Captain Ashland were talking about the bookplate? Well, of course he knew something about it; you've heard how Julia's mother threw the book to him from this balcony, where those very granite pillars stand that form the bookplate frame?"

"So they do! so they do!"

"Maybe Mr. Case was trying to find that book, when I saw him Thursday evening, really to see if he could help Julia with it," pursued Nancy, not without shrewdness. "You see, he did know Mr. Grosvenor, and then he found out who Julia was, when she fainted in the shop; he must have guessed what they both wanted."

Yes, all Mr. Case's queer furtive actions now appeared in a new, rosy light. What he knew of Mary Grosvenor's secret had apparently not been enough to determine him on what he thought the best course of action to help her daughter, then under a cloud. He had therefore come personally to Julia's aid, to try to discover the best course.

"And you're not going to try to find out why Mary Grosvenor hid that key under that bookplate!" I ejaculated crushingly.

Nancy flung down the fashion supplement.

"But whatever I do," she protested, "Peter will think he did it himself, and if it should by any chance be wrong, he'll say I'm young."

"He will, my dear," I agreed, "for he is a man and a brother. But that won't stop you doing things, I suppose?"

She was already half way downstairs. Professor Harrington and Mr. Almy were just departing. We all shook hands warmly. Mr. Almy breathed kind thanks for my humble assistance, and hopes, which I shared, that we might meet again, either officially or unofficially. They were gone; and Nancy forthwith developed a burning enthusiasm for the key quest.

Julia mentioned some old mahogany boxes in her room which had always stuck fast and refused to open; Nancy said she didn't believe the key would fit any of them, though she had never seen them, but she would try it. She flitted away; then Julia turned to Peter and me. There was a new, sweet, serious determination on her face.

"I'm going to tell you both something; something I've known ever since last Monday morning; something—" she addressed Peter—"that you did for me, that you never told about and never would tell about, I know well—"

He fairly sprang from his chair.

"Stop!" he interrupted, in frantic agitation. "I beg you not to speak; everything's over now; it's of no consequence!"

"It is of the utmost consequence," said Julia, firmly, "that I acknowledge what I owe to you. For last Monday morning, when I dashed up the aisle in Darrow's, and you, Mr. Burton, came rushing toward me, you saw this in my hand."

Dipping behind some books on the table, she held up the spring-lancet, to Peter's increased agitation. She went on calmly:

"You saw more: although I instantly concealed the weapon under my cape, you saw its blades protruding slightly, as the kick of the mechanism always causes them to do. I reset the hammer at once, to throw off suspicion that my cousin had used the weapon, and sliding it to the floor under my cape, I kicked it as violently as I could, so it would land under that desk at the door. That kick was what bruised my foot: I stubbed my toe hard, and my feet were not protected by shoes."

"What?" asked Peter, surprised.

Julia smiled at me.

"Miss Fuller could have told you that I had on black satin bedroom slippers," she assured him; "only she didn't tell anybody!"

"Good for you, Constance," said Peter; "I don't quite get all this, but slippers might have looked queer, eh?"

"Very. I'll tell you now how I came to wear them. As you know, my grandfather and I had a disagreement on Sunday. I made up my mind that he must tell me about my parents; so I told him I had been to the Richmond auction to see that book. He refused me all information, not too kindly. Next morning at breakfast he appeared all ready to go out; I felt sure he was bound for Darrow's. I don't go to my studio until ten o'clock. I had on a breakfast jacket and slippers, therefore, and had just time, after he had left the house to slip on a frock and hurry after him so I could keep him in sight. My slippers were black, so inconspicuous that I could take a chance that they would not be noticed. Yet they might have weighed against me, as showing that I had left the house in hasty, possibly angry pursuit of my grandfather. Miss Fuller gave me the benefit of the doubt.

"And you, Mr. Burton, saw me in distress at Richmond, you suspected I had trailed that book to your shop, you heard me cry: 'He's dead!' and saw this weapon in my hand; yet you gave me, a stranger, the protection of your silence at the price of suffering to yourself. And finally, you cleared my uncle of all suspicion, forever. You don't think I'm going to let that all pass without a word, though I can never repay you?"

"Don't talk to me about repayment!" said Peter, sharply. "It's enough for me to have always believed in you."

"Well," smiled Julia, "you'll have to take credit, at least. When Mr. Almy brought my uncle here, I told both of them everything!"

Peter looked at her determinedly.

"I don't want credit," he said.

So, as it was the day of rest and he had plenty of time, I gave him a chance to tell her what he did want.

CHAPTER XIV

They Have Their Reward.

Monday morning I awoke very early, and viewed the fading stars with regret that the lists of adventure should seem to have closed, however happily. A very few bits of the Colfax bookplate picture-puzzle remained to be fitted in; and then what? Well, at least work, and work was always an adventure to me. So, as I still had plenty of it to do after the previous interrupted week, I took an early train into town. A quarter past eight saw me walking down Fourth avenue through the pale fall sunbeams slanting over the low buildings. But when I reached Darrow's, lo and behold! there were Peter and Nancy before me!

"Good morning, Constance. I want to talk to you," announced Nancy; adding as an afterthought, "so does Peter."

"I came early to get ready my report for Mr. Darrow on the Raynes Foreside sale," explained Peter. "It's going to be a wonder, but I suppose he'll pick me to pieces on principle, anyhow."

"He sha'n't," promised Nancy.

"What I wanted to tell you, Constance," continued Peter, "is of special interest to you; it's about your boy friend Charles MacIvor."

"He has repented, I don't believe," I observed.

"At least he has been forgiven; I don't know just how you would work that, but anyway, it has been done. He came last night to say good-by to his cousin."

"Good-by? Where's he going?"

"To Buenos Aires, very soon. I guess they're going to let him off pretty easily, as the case against him isn't of the greatest importance. He did sell those bonds; but it seems they formed part of the estate he will inherit, and he has confessed and will make any reparation decided on. Besides, he gave the authorities much information that was useful in helping solve the Grosvenor mystery, including the fact that he was the poor boob who tried to pinch that book in Richmond—from me! So the demands of justice won't be too hard to satisfy, and he's due to clear out. Well, good-riddance!"

It is surprising how many layers of rouge and powder some of the young feminine faces can take on without showing signs of checking.

The navy aviator who has just made a new record for altitude while carrying a "useful" load no doubt carried a sandwich in his equipment.

Not satisfied with revolting, those Chinese rebels are going to change the name of Peking to Peiping. That's the worst part of these wars—they make us learn our geography all over again.

Weather by No Means Matter of Latitude

Weather is not a matter of latitude except so far as the equatorial regions and the poles are concerned. Such a temperature as ten below zero at sea level is much more devilish than thirty below in Minnesota, because the air at the seaboard is practically always moving and wind at so low a figure is torture. Again, such a temperature as 103 in the shade at Boston is less tolerable than a like or even higher figure in the wide-open spaces where men are men and mostly politicians, talking through ten-gallon hats. New York is in the latitude of Lisbon, Naples and Constantinople. It is far colder in the winter than any of these, and colder than any part of Great Britain, which is in the latitude of Labrador. That country is not "warmed" by the Gulf stream, which is indistinguishable in point of heat half way across the Atlantic. Three-fourths of the possible points of the compass account for reasonably mild sea winds so far as Great Britain is concerned. In winter in New York more than half of the possible winter winds have come over thousands of miles of snow.—Barron's Financial Weekly.

Birds' Courtship

Male birds in the mating season often perform love dances and engage in other peculiar antics, as, for instance, the mad acrobatics of the chat, which are for the special amusement of the females; their effort being, as Darwin observed, to display their charms to their prospective wives.

Still in the Making

It takes patience and wise forecast to make one satisfied with the slow development of things in the world. So much is in the making. The present output may seem imperfect and uncouth, but wait; after a while the finished product, and it will please us much. It was on this account that a Scottish artist once said: "I never let bairns or fools see my pictures till they are done." It takes a mature mind to get along with immature things.

In the earthquake of 1662, 300,000 persons were buried in Peking alone.

All solid parts of the body are heavier than water. The specific gravity varies with the parts under consideration.

Highway of Ice

As an experiment in Russia recently, logging operations were conducted over a two-mile road of ice, rather than the usual covering of snow, and it was found that the animals could draw much greater loads on the ice than on the snow owing to the absence of resistance which is offered by the softer snow. Something over 350,000 cubic feet of wood were transported during a three-month period, and in this work one-horse sleighs were used, having a width between runners of 3.25 feet. Because of the reduced friction, as compared with haulage over snow, the animals were able to draw anywhere from six to eight times their own weight. Besides effecting a considerable saving in the cost of logging operations, the ice roads made it possible to cut down the number of draft animals ordinarily required.

National Rifle Matches Now On

The national rifle matches, one of America's great sporting events being held at Camp Perry on Lake Erie, will be continued until September 16. Thousands of civilians as well as army, navy and marine experts are in attendance. One reason for the large gathering is the fact that tents or sleeping quarters have been supplied free to civilians. Meals are also furnished at cost price.

At its last session congress passed an amendment to the National Defense act which insures the holding of these great matches annually. It means that our government officially approves of rifle and pistol training for the youth of our nation, for civilians as well as soldiers.

The national rifle matches are not, as some believe, a strictly military affair. No one is barred from competing. The bill specifically mentions the army, navy, marine corps, National Guard, or organized militia of the several states, territories and District of Columbia, the Reserve Officers' Training corps and the Citizens' Military Training camps, rifle clubs and individual citizens.

Special arrangements were made this year for women and children, for many entrants took their families to the camp. There were also an unusual number of events for boys and girls, ranging in age from twelve to nineteen years. For several years the National Rifle association has promoted junior rifle clubs in every state. This year the range at times resembled a huge school yard during recess.

One of the reasons for the large number of entries this year is the program of entertainment keeps the campers happy. There were demonstrations of all arms by the army. The pilgrims were also given every opportunity to enjoy bathing, canoeing and other sports.

Prior to the shooting of the national matches many contests of national importance will be held under the supervision of the National Rifle association. Among these events are the President's match, the Wimbledon Cup and Leech Cup matches, some regimental matches, and other events that have been fired year after.

In the past a number of youngsters have entered the great marksmanship derby on the shores of Lake Erie, but most of them have been the sons of officers of the army, navy or marine corps. This year, however, boys and girls from all parts of the country sent in their applications to the headquarters of the N. R. A. in Washington.

So Go the Cards

First Sacker Jim Bottomley is not the only star on the St. Louis Cardinals, nor the team's particular premier in any department, but there are those who do say that as Bottomley goes, so go the Cards. It may be true, but Jim is having a big year—and so are the Cards. They are smiling through with "Smiling Jim." Bottomley may not be the cleverest first sacker in baseball, but oh, the power of his punch when his bat swings true! And the inspiration of his cheer leading of a bunch that is a happy, cheering gang of go-after-'em ball players.

Grafted Gland Makes a Race Horse Big Winner

The spectacle of erstwhile "nags" romping home for derby honors may be witnessed if race horse owners decide to put a little pep into their steeds by gland-grafting a la Voronoff.

The Voronofication of an "oats destroyer" has in fact already been accomplished with brilliant results. The case in hand is that of Don Zuniga. His owner, M. Veil-Picard, set to win the grand hurdle race at Paris, experimented on Don Zuniga, where there was room for improvement, even if the horse himself could not exactly be classed as a "boner." The operation was performed in accordance with the best rules laid down by Voronoff.

The big race was run at Auteuil. At the starter's signal, Don Zuniga, released by his jockey, went away like a streak of lightning. The twenty-two hurdles were negotiated as if they had never been there to obstruct the way. Don Zuniga won as he wanted. The 5,000 meters (a little better than three miles) were run in record time, five minutes six seconds. No horse has ever before been able to make that time at Auteuil.

Horse owners are enthusiastic, but race courses with coconut palms or other tall timber may see these removed for fear that monkey-gland contestants will run up a tree at a critical moment.

Former Saints Playing Regularly With Yankees

Down East they call the St. Paul American association club a Yankee farm, a name St. Paul disclaims, but farm or no farm, the Saints have been delivering to the American league pace setters.

Four former members of the St. Paul team are New York regulars. Three others, rated as substitutes, have been used frequently because of injuries to first string men.

Catcher Collins, Shortstop Lazzeri and Pitchers Pipgrass and Moore are the former Saints playing regularly with the Yankees. Shortstop Koenig, third baseman Robertson and Durst, utility, are the other St. Paul players with the Yankees.

Bob Connery, former Yankee scout, owns the St. Paul club.

Hornsby's Main Aim Is to Beat Out the Giants

It will be interesting to observe what kind of fight the Boston Braves can make against New York in the games remaining to be played with that team. Boston's showing has not been so good to date. It may be expected to improve. Manager Hornsby wants to win against the Giants or he will dislodge a lot of deadwood on the Boston team.

If Hornsby is to be boss of the Braves, the owners of the club must come to him to consult him on players. It is not very likely that more swaps will be made by Boston puts its strength into the York organization.

Simmons' Batting Form Appears to Be Awkward

Al Simmons' batting stance is wrong—all wrong. The Polish outfielder of the Athletics swings at the last second with his right foot "in the bucket" and his form appears more awkward than that of a fat man taking his swing at a golf ball.

For many weary months Connie Mack tried to persuade Simmons to swing in the orthodox manner, but to no avail. Al persisted in his habits. The other day the best he could do was three home runs and three singles in eight times at bat.

Gets No Pitching

Manager Rogers Hornsby of the Braves complains with plenty of reason that he can't get any pitching for his team. Other managers say the very same thing.

Al Demaree suggested that the reason was that there are so many "angles to pitching."

"I can't see it," came back Hornsby. "There's only one angle, as I see it—get the ball over the plate with something on it, but most of them can't do even that."

FARM POULTRY

COCCIDIOSIS CAN BE CONTROLLED

Drugs, no matter how impressive their labels, are of no value in controlling coccidiosis, chick disease that is fully as bad as it sounds.

The poultrymen who regularly every spring lose chicks from this disease might better put their faith in inexpensive sanitation methods and the feeding of milk to control coccidiosis, according to extension poultry specialists at the Ohio State university.

Scientists at the University of California tried these medicines to control coccidiosis: Hydrochloric acid, catechy, a mixture of bichloride of mercury and sulpho-carbolates, potassium dichromate, powdered ipecac and bismuth subnitrate. None of the drugs was effective.

"The disease can be controlled," the Ohio specialists say, "by sanitation and by liberal feeding of milk. The milk helps by producing acidity in the ceca and by stimulating rapid growth. The mash recommended by the University of California is this: Forty pounds of dry skim milk, 10 pounds of wheat bran, 30 pounds of yellow corn meal, 20 pounds of ground oats or barley.

"Start feeding this mash as soon as the presence of the disease is determined. Keep the mash constantly before the chicks in hoppers. The essential thing is to get sufficient milk into the chick and to keep the house and surroundings absolutely clean.

"Sick chicks should immediately be separated from healthy ones. Burn the dead ones."

More Than One Culling Is Essential in Year

Culling hens is the process of removing from the flock the undesirable, the object being to increase the average egg production of the flock and to retain for breeding purposes those hens which possess superior qualities. While the term culling is usually applied to hens during their laying period, successful poultrymen are constantly employing a system of culling, including the eggs selected for incubation, the young stock at broiler size, the pullets just before they go into their winter laying quarters, and the males used as breeders. The greatest emphasis in the past has been placed on the laying flock on the basis that the best producers in the past will naturally be the best producers in the future.

The first requirement for successful culling is the treatment of the flock prior to the culling process. Obviously good hens will appear as culls if they have not received proper rations or care. The most expert will be helpless in determining the relative value of various hens unless the hens have been fed satisfactory laying rations in adequate amounts.

Egg-Laying Difficulty Is Very Easily Cured

It often happens that a hen has difficulty in laying an egg—probably a particularly large double-yolked one. Such a bird is easily detected. Not only is she to be seen visiting the nest again and again without effect, but she is visibly ill at ease, crouching about with tail down and a generally woe-begone appearance. The quickest way to relieve her is to give her two teaspoonfuls of castor oil (by means of a clean fountain-pen filler), and immediately after to pour into the vent two teaspoonfuls of olive oil. This will inevitably result in the egg being passed within an hour or so.

Like Old Roosts

Pullets learn to like their roosts in the colony houses and fruit trees. After they have been housed for several weeks the weather may be warm and sunshiny, and there is a great temptation to turn out the flock for a few more days of exercise on the range. If this is done, and the pullets have any way of returning to their old roosts, they are apt to leave the laying house some evening, and it is a most discouraging job picking them from the trees.

Corn Is Important

Good yellow corn is very important in mash and scratch feed. Difficulties experienced with coarsely cracked grains have caused some people to not use it as much as would otherwise be the case. When corn is cracked, it should be sifted and the finer parts put into the mash. The remainder should then be used as scratch grain. If fine parts of cracked grain are not fed in the mash, it will not be eaten and will mold on the floors and other damp places.

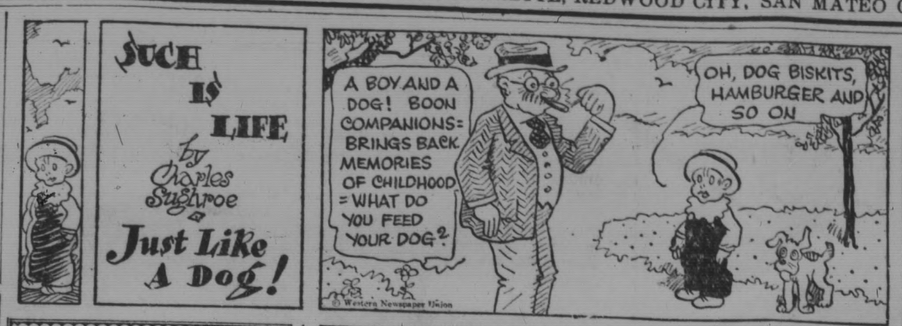
Sun Saps Pep

Exposure to the sun turns white plumage yellow, bleaches yellow and buff plumage, robs black feathers of their luster and turns them brown. The sun which puts life into chickens, if given in continuous doses saps their pep and stunts their growth. Ducks suffer even more. Poults wilt. Whether it be a shelter of branches or burlap, or the living shade of bushes and trees, give the poultry a hiding place from the hot sun during the summer season.

Late Laying Hens

The remaining cull hens should be removed and the best producers banded. The late laying hens should be kept as breeders provided they have the characteristics necessary for good breeders. Increased egg production in the flock can be brought about if these best birds are mated with good males from producers known to be high.

They must be well-fleshed and continue to gain rather than lose weight as the season advances.



SMILES AND LAUGHTER

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

SHE was a very handsome woman I had to admit to myself as I caught a hasty impression of her sitting composedly in her section as I came into the car. I am influenced very strongly by first impressions, I am almost ashamed to admit, and there was an air of refinement about this woman which was very convincing. Her gown was in excellent taste—modest, conservative, and carefully tailored. Her hair was beautifully kept and her hands well manicured. I got all this in a quick impression as I went to my seat in the middle of the car. She seemed a person one might like.

It was when she laughed that the vision of her loveliness faded out like an electric light when the switch is turned off. It was a coarse, raucus, vulgar laugh that pierced to the remotest corners of the car. Women turned in their seats to see what had happened. Men craned their necks to discover whence came the jangling nerve-racking sound. It was an illiterate, untrained, undisciplined voice which spoke volumes. The most skillful art of modiste and hairdresser and manicurist could not efface the impression of that loud laugh. It would take a surgical operation to do anything with it. She was just common, that was all.

Those who first met Keene, even the most charitable in expressing their opinions, were wont to say that he had a very plain face. It was current opinion that he was the ugliest man in town. He had rugged irregular features, a large nose, and a wide cut mouth. His was a very serious, almost a dull face when it was in repose. But when he smiled you would have received an altogether different impression of him. It was a smile that changed and radiated his whole countenance. It was the gentlest, friendliest, kindest, smile I have ever seen on a man's face. Before he spoke you could divine that his voice was soft and well modulated. You knew without being told that you could trust him. He was the sort of man you would go to if you were in trouble, knowing full well that you would find sympathy and understanding. Dogs wagged their tails when he came near them; children were never afraid of him as they were often of the more comely faced. I could never explain this excepting that his smile suggested gentleness, and his quiet gentleness won human beings and animals as well.

So far as I know, man is the only animal that expresses emotion or a state of mind by smiles or laughter. The hyena laughs we are told and the loon, but there is no more real laughter in the sounds they make than there is music in the bray of a donkey. Words, some one has said were given us by the gods to conceal our thoughts, but smiles and laughter are the most definite and sincere revelation of our true character and state of mind. The villain may smile but his smile only tends to reveal his villainy.

Solid Gold Bath Fittings in Mansion

Windsor, England.—The most costly residence in England is known here as "The Willows," but neighbors prefer to call it "The House of the Arabian Nights."

It is the residence of Sir Dhunjibhoy Bomanji, wealthy Bombay merchant. It stands within sight of the towers of Windsor castle, one of the homes of the king and queen of England, but it is said to be furnished more elaborately than even the royal home.

Every bedroom in Sir Dhunjibhoy's home is fitted with a marble wash basin, and every hydrant, bracket and hatrack is made of solid gold. In Sir Dhunjibhoy's own room the legs of the washstand are also of gold.

All the furniture is on a corresponding style of magnificence. The rooms are furnished according to various period, and the furniture consists entirely of rare antiques. Sir Dhunjibhoy's bedroom is finished in French style in the fashion of Louis XIV.

The house of the Indian millionaire is built in Tudor style. It is surrounded by beautiful gardens, dotted with marble statuary and fountains. One of the marble pieces, known as "Truth," attracts particular attention. It represents a nude woman holding aloft a mirror.

Sir Dhunjibhoy, in addition to being a connoisseur of solid gold and marble, is also a sportsman. He has a large stable of horses on his grounds, and to the rear of his gardens a miniature race track has been laid out.

With so magnificent a home, entertaining is second nature to the Bombay potentate and Lady Bomanji. Their guestrooms are almost always occupied, and Sir Dhunjibhoy has given several large functions which many British titled people attended.

Sir Dhunjibhoy Bomanji was knighted in 1922 for services rendered the British and Indian governments during the World war. He has now come to England to make his permanent residence here.

"Grief Speculators" Barred in Hospitals

"Speculators in grief" are henceforth banned from the corridors of Rome hospitals. The "speculators" are gentry who habitually loiter about the large public hospitals of the Italian capital. When they see some one emerging from a sick room they endeavor to ascertain whether the person visited has just died or is about to die, and proffer cards for the undertaking establishment with which they are connected. The etiquette of this profession was to approach only those persons who wept or otherwise showed great emotion. Competition, however, became so great that the eager "runners" for the undertakers began pushing their masters' services on hospital visitors indiscriminately. The Romans rebelled. One of the newspapers started a campaign against "speculators in grief." The police made several arrests and now patrol the wards so that one may visit a sick friend without unwelcome solicitations by the advance agents of an undertaker.

Bears 200-Word Will Tattooed on His Back

London.—A 200-word will bequeathing large sums of money to several persons has been tattooed on the back of a man who walked into a tattooing establishment in Waterloo road.

He had the will written out on a piece of paper, and asked that it should be transferred to his back. He sat for five hours while the work was done and the will was duly witnessed.

"He was a Colonial, and about thirty years of age," George Burchett, the tattooist, said afterward.

"This is the first will I have ever tattooed during a long experience, and it was difficult, tricky work."

Wife Stealing Costly

London.—The price of wives is advancing. Within the last few weeks London divorce courts have awarded damages to husbands against corespondents to the tune of $10,000 and $15,000, and lastly, a few days ago a husband was awarded $50,000.

The $50,000 went to George Edgar Ingman, an estate agent and surveyor of Worcester, who obtained a divorce from his wife, daughter of a wealthy man, on the ground of misconduct with Captain Neel Pearson, formerly of The Birches, Hagley, near Birmingham. Mr. Ingman announced in advance that he would not retain the award, but would use it as a fund for his daughter by the erring wife. A similar declaration was made by the husband who received the award of $10,000.

In 1905 Demetrius Sophocles Constantinidi received an award of $125,000 against a Doctor Lance in an English court. The $50,000 received by Mr. Ingman equaled any record made since then.

English judges have a wide latitude in addressing the jury in both civil and criminal cases. Suits for divorce are combined with suits against the corespondent for loss of the wife's services, under the English procedure. It is not unusual for a judge in summing up to remark, in effect, that after hearing the evidence the jury might conclude that the husband, instead of obtaining damages, should thank the corespondent for relieving him of a worthless wife, and the jury ordinarily reacts to the sentiments expressed by the judge because they heard the evidence when he did.

The general rule seems to be that the husband is entitled to damage, if the wife was a real helpmeet, but to refuse them if she was a nagger and a handicap instead of helpmeet. The corespondent is punished not for adultery but on the old theory that a wife is, or should be, useful around the house and in assisting her husband's work for their joint benefit. When the corespondent steals the wife he deprives the husband of her services, if any. Quite often the judge and jury cannot see that she was of any service, and then the jury awards very light damages, or none. In one case the jury awarded the husband a sixpence and in another he got a farthing. If those husbands felt spiteful toward their deserting wives they had the satisfaction of knowing that the jury had publicly branded the wives as worthless.

Extreme feminists are chafing over the awards against corespondents because they say that the award is based upon the fact that the wife is regarded by the law in such suits as a chattel, which is exactly true. If a man deprived another of a horse and the evidence showed that the horse was too vicious to be employed for any useful work and was an expense and a menace to the welfare of the rightful owner, the judge and jury would be inclined to disregard the real owner's valuation of the horse and award nominal damages for its loss. The comparison with a horse displeases the feminists, but only a very few of them have been heard complaining about the position in which women place themselves by breech of promise suits, and by suits on the part of childless women for alimony.

Lord Merrivale, in summing up in the Ingman case, said Mrs. Ingman daughter of wealth, had been a helpful wife, apparently, to her hard-working husband until the wealthy Captain Pearson came along and she went off with him. She had said that Captain Pearson could afford to spend $30,000 to $50,000 per year giving her a liberal allowance.

English judges and juries are equally vexed when the evidence makes clear that a rich man has lured away the wife of a poorer man by lavish offers of money. The juries are inclined to grant damages in such cases as punishment for the seducer, although the court solemnly warns the juries that they are to consider only the helpfulness, if any, of the wife to the husband.

7-Month-Old Alabama Baby Talks Fluently

Birmingham, Ala.—Birmingham is laying claim to possession of the prize infant prodigy—a seven-month-old baby who converses as fluently as a child of several years. When she was one week old she could pronounce words distinctly, and at three weeks she could pronounce a number of words, such as "daddy," "eat," "I want up," and "I want to get up."

The child is Yuvawn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James E. Shotts. She was born November 23, 1927. One of the amazing things is that she has cried but twice since she was born—once immediately after her birth, and another time when she had an attack of colic.

Wylodin, her sister, now six years of age, is an accomplished musician. She has memorized pieces of music and can play more than 200 from sight reading at the piano.

Both children are normal and healthy. Both their parents are college graduates, readers and musicians.

Indians Spear Salmon

Toppenish, Wash.—It is salmon time in the big rivers of the northwest states. Indians know it as the harvest time when they catch fat fish and preserve the fillets for winter.

Hour after hour Indian fishermen—from ten to twelve tribes—sit on the stone masonry of the Sunnyside irrigation dam, near here, spears poised, ready to lunge at large leaping chinook or cohoe salmon which are running up the Yakima river to spawn.

Tense, immovable as statues, they wait. Onlookers see the flashing back of the salmon leaping up the smooth waterfall. There is a lightning quick strike and the struggling sliver beauty, safely speared, is drawn to land to be unjavelined and the spear is ready for another victim.

The best salmon spears are fitted with barbed hooks and the fish is gaffed, rather than speared. The hook comes off the end of the shaft and dangles on a cord tied to the pole. This, the Indians point out, prevents breakage of the shaft when a thirty or forty pound fish is taken.

Sometimes a dozen big salmon will be hooked by one Indian in a day. At other times days pass without a catch. But the redmen never complain about luck. They poise over the shimmering, tumbling water patiently waiting until fish do come within range.

This primitive life is re-enacted at a score of rapids and dams in other rivers of the Northwest.

On shore squaws and young folks from the tribes split the salmon, hanging the meat over lines or slender poles to sun dry. Before the fish season is passed northwest Indians will have filled many willow baskets with dried fish steaks, insuring them against hunger at winter's coming.

Only Indians from reservations may so fish in northwest streams, being permitted by treaty to do so.

Greek Department Important To Bank of Italy

A. Rossi, assistant cashier of the Redwood City branch of the Bank of Italy today submitted the following article on the Greek department of the Bank of Italy to the Times-Gazette.

Argos, fifty miles from Athens and a center of Greek culture 3,000 years before Christ was born, may be considered as having made a definite contribution to the lives and the welfare of the thrifty Americans of Greek extraction in California.

The thing that makes ancient Argos pertinent to this story is the fact that Basil Metropoulos, head of the Greek department, in the Bank of Italy, and past commander of Hellenic Post, No. 230, American Legion, in San Francisco, was born there. Metropoulos is the custodian of approximately 7,000 savings accounts of present and former Greek nationals in California, and keeps close check on the more than $2,700,000 that these accounts represent.

The number of Greeks in California is in excess of 35,000 and they form an important element in the economic make-up of the state. There are many professional men in the list, while the number of well-to-do-merchants is considerable. According to the latest tabulation there are 771 groceries, 323 confectionaries and 639 restaurants in San Francisco operated by Greeks, while their participation in many other business enterprises is hardly less imposing.

There are two Greek orthodox churches in San Francisco. A cathedral, to be known as St. Sophia's in the same city, has been planned. A. P. Giannini, president of the Bancitaly Corporation and founder of the Bank of Italy, is one of the donors to the cathedral fund.

An interesting member of the Greek staff of the bank is Nicholas Mimopoulous, who for three years served as secretary to the Greek Embassy in Wasnington. He attends to the considerable business activity marking the relations between the customers of his department and the Greek Consulate-General in San Francisco, and all other business involving a political aspect.

The first interest of the Greek department is Americanzation. Its system for the instruction of prospective citizens is fully as well developed as its system for the handling of savings accounts, remittances and credit transactions. The department supplies court witnesses for such prospective citizens and drills them in court and naturalization procedure.

The department was established in 1921 and soon was drawing accounts from all parts of the state. Metropoulous, the manager, has been with the bank for 13 years, the only break in his service coming during the World War, when he enlisted and was sent to Camp Lewis. He served there for one year, being discharged with the rank of corporal. He came to America from his native city of Argos as an emmigrant boy when he was about fourteen years of age. In addition to its large list of Greek depositors, the bank has many stockholders of that nationality. There is considerable business transacted between the Bank of Italy and the National Bank of Greece and the Bank of Athens, both of the latter institutions having branches in New York.

Demand for Lamb On the Increase

(By Capitol News Bureau)

SACRAMENTO, Aug. 30—The American appetite has entered the transition period—a change, incidentally, that augurs well for the sheep industry.

On the week-day menu, the lamb chop is winning a place of greater prominence.

And the leg of lamb is doing a startling come-mack in its bid for premier honors on the Sunday dinner table.

This sidelight on the evolution of appetite was given today by George A. Scott, federal-state livestock statistician, in his mid-season report on the lamb market.

The consumer demand for lamb has shown marked improvement during the last six months, Scott reports, due arily to the fact that sheep of the new generation are running circles around some of the old hens of the chickenyard. A decreased poultry supply aggravated by increased prices, has helped to promote popularity of lamb, according to Scott.

Still another factor contributing to the increased demand for lamb on the dinner table, says the federal expert, is the industrial recovery now setting in, which means greater purchasing power for consumers. The first half of 1928 marked the end of the decline in general business activity, he reports, and the workingman is eating better because the promise of employment for the last half of 1928 and the new year ahead is greatly improved.
